Ribosomes and Protein Synthesis

Transcription happens in the nucleus. It involves copying the shape of the DNA, and creating a message. This message (the template) then goes to the cytoplasm where the necessary materials (amino acids) are ready, where they finally go through ribosomes to form the shape. The final shape becomes a protein that goes...

There's a ribosome in the cytoplasm where amino acids form polypeptides

Copy of one side of DNA strand is made (called mRNA, messenger RNA)

mRNA moves to cytoplasm, then ribosome mRNA goes through ribosome 3 bases at a time transfer RNA (tRNA) matches up with the open DNA bases tRNA releases the amino acid at the top, which joins the chain of amino acids being produced
