

1. White sets the scene with a clear, simple statement.

2. This sentence appeals to the senses of sight and touch. It brings an experience to life for the reader.

3. Here, the author shares his thoughts and feelings so that we know what this moment means to him.

(from "Once More to the Lake")

We went fishing the first morning. I felt the same damp moss covering the worms in the bait can, and saw the dragonfly alight on the tip of my rod as it hovered a few inches from the surface of the water. It was the arrival of this fly that convinced me beyond any doubt that everything was as it always had been, that the years were a mirage and that there had been no years. The small waves were the same, chucking the rowboat under the chin as we fished at anchor, and the boat was the same boat, the same color green and the ribs broken in the same places, and under the floorboards the same fresh-water leavings and débris—the dead helgramite, the wisps of moss, the rusty discarded fishhook, and dried blood from yesterday's catch. We stared silently at the tips of our rods, at the dragonflies that came and went. I lowered the tip of mine into the water, tentatively, pensively dislodging the fly, which darted two feet away, poised, darted two feet back, and came to rest again a little farther up the rod. There had been no years between the ducking of this dragonfly and the other one—the one that was part of memory.

4. White describes with great precision the physical details of fishing on the lake. By repeating the phrase "the same," he conveys his sense of the present superimposed on the past.

5. In this passage, the fly is the key point of reference that defines the action.
