

QUESTION 1: Professor Menendez

1. Professor Menendez conducted an experiment to investigate the effects of a new medication for treating the symptoms of obsessive-compulsive disorder.

Part A

Explain the concept of compulsion in the context of obsessive-compulsive disorder.

Compulsions are physical/behavioral acts involving those with OCD. Typically a compulsive act is done in an attempt to alleviate the discomfort created by an obsession.

Based off the question wording of "the context of obsessive-compulsive disorder", answers may need to include the fact that the compulsions cause distress/disturbance/interference.

Part B

Explain why each of the following would be used in this experiment to help establish cause and effect. • Random assignment • Placebo condition

Random assignment is the process that ensures all members of the sample have an equal chance of being placed in the experimental or control group. It would be used by Prof Menendez to ensure that all uncontrolled factors (extraneous variables) are spread randomly throughout the participants, and will not have a significant impact on the results.

Placebo Condition is a substance (a placebo) is given to one group of participants in an experiment designed to have no effect, while the treatment (in this case a new drug) being tested is given to another experimental group. The Placebo Condition would provide a control group to compare the results of the experimental group (receiving the treatment).

Part C

Professor Menendez presented the research at an international conference. After the presentation, audience members met in small groups to discuss the research. Explain how each of the following may affect the attendees' discussion of the research. • Groupthink • Display rules • Belief perseverance • Cocktail party effect

Answers must clearly indicate "how each of the following may affect the attendees' discussion"

Groupthink is the tendency for members of a cohesive group to reach decisions without weighing all the facts, especially those contradicting the majority opinion. The small group discussion could be hampered by those simply attempting to find a harmonious agreement, instead of voicing their opinions on potential validity concerns of the experiment.

Display Rules are the expected or appropriate way of expressing emotions that vary from culture to culture and situation to situation. As this is an international conference, display rules may hinder the attendees' discussion if they may misinterpret one another (examples of examples could be not being fully positive, facial expressions or lack of expressions as offensive or inappropriate).

Belief perseverance is holding onto one's beliefs even after disconfirmation (e.g. of that belief has been contradicted). Belief Perseverance could hinder the attendees' discussion, because no matter what results are shown, they may continue to agree what they already believed about that particular medication or disorder (OCD).

Cocktail party effect is when when our attention quickly draws away from our conversation when if we hear something that may trigger our attention (our name or familiar subject) thus leading to divided attention. This could negatively impact the discussion of research if someone is not fully engaged in the discussion as they were attentive to another table group, which could lead to lack of meaningful feedback.
