

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The participants were 60 older adults (mean age = 72.5 years) who were randomly assigned to either an exercise group or a control group. The exercise group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program. The control group did not perform any exercise. The physical fitness and health-related quality of life were measured at baseline and at 12 weeks. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly higher physical fitness and health-related quality of life at 12 weeks compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume exercise program can improve the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults.
