Introduction

Photosynthesis is the process by which plants assemble carbon-based compounds which are the building blocks and energy stores of life. Plants first entrap sunlight energy and convert it to a chemical energy in ATP molecules which are in form of bonds. ATP brings energy to reactions where glucose is formed from water and carbon dioxide. To finish, glucose molecules are combined to form starch and other molecules. Oxygen is also produced during photosynthesis which is released in to the atmosphere (Koning, 1994, p. 1). The process of photosynthesis is summarized in the equation below;

Aerobic respiration is a procedure of cellular respiration that utilizes oxygen to split molecules to release electrons and form energy (Gregory, 2006, p. 2). In this process adenosine triphosphate (ATP) is produced which is liable for storing up and transporting most energy to other body cells. Aerobic respiration has two by-products which are water and carbon dioxide. It usually involves three main stages of reactions glycolysis which include the Krebs's cycle and electron transport phosphorylation. The equation below is a summary of aerobic respiration;

How the two processes are linked between plants and animals based on the reactants and products of both pathways

The two processes are the life blood of plants and animals. These processes link in the way that the by-products of one process are used as the raw materials of the other.

Kingsland, 2023-07-25 The first book to chronicle how innovation in laboratory designs for botanical research energized the emergence of physiological plant ecology as a vibrant subdiscipline. Laboratory innovation since the mid-twentieth century has powered advances in the study of plant adaptation, evolution, and ecosystem function. The phytotron, an integrated complex of controlled environment, greenhouse, and laboratory spaces, invented by Frits W. Went in the 1950s, set off a worldwide laboratory movement and transformed the plant sciences. Sharon Kingsland explores this revolution through a comparative study of work in the United States, France, Australia, Israel, the USSR, and Hungary. These advances in botanical research energized physiological plant ecology. Case studies explore the development of phytotron spinoffs such as mobile laboratories, rhizotrons, and ecotrons. Scientific problems include the significance of plant emissions of volatile organic compounds, symbiosis between plants and soil fungi, and the discovery of new pathways for photosynthesis as an adaptation to hot, dry climates. The advancement of knowledge through synthesis is a running theme, linking disciplines, combining laboratory and field research, and moving across ecological scales from leaf to ecosystem. The book also charts the history of modern scientific responses to the emerging crisis of food insecurity in the era of global warming. Food and Lifestyle in Health and Disease Chuong Pham-Huy, Bruno Pham Huy, 2022-04-29 Food
