

My Personal Nursing Philosophy

My nursing philosophy is characterized by doing the act of nursing towards my patients through providing care with compassion. These guiding principles/ personal philosophy are products of my interactions with patients, their families and other health care professionals. Through my philosophy in nursing, it affects the choices and decisions I make towards giving the required nursing procedures and care to my patients. For 8 years of being a nurse, I was able to realize that God made me a nurse with a purpose and not just merely reaching my own dreams literally but to touch people's lives in my own act of kindness most especially during the times that they are sick and hopeless in the health care setting.

When I was a student we are oriented that nursing is a caring profession and can be described as both heart and mind. For me, all knowledge and learnings regarding the ideal patient medical interventions would be useless if we do not respect human dignity. Also, as a nurse I must be a compassionate/empathetic enough to the suffering or present health problem of the patient. When we show empathy, we can nurture a collaborative relationship with our patients and it can help us to gather necessary information needed for their care like the causes and explanations that would contribute in determining the right diagnosis of their condition and the most effective treatment they require. Compassionate care makes patients more comfortable with us. Still, it is from the care we provide that we can help the patients recover from their present illnesses. Correspondingly, our expertise along with our passion and strength must go hand in hand for the sake of our patients because our ultimate goal is the safety of our patients. In addition, I always think of the golden rule" Do unto others as you would have them do unto you", I always sympathize with my patients and put their shoes on mine so that I could understand their feelings. So, whenever I think I am a patient, I always want to be treated with care and compassion since no one would love and like to cooperate with a health care provider having negative attitudes because they can have a significant negative impact on the patient's care.

Meanwhile, the progressing role of professional nurses is knotted with technology. Even if technology is important to nursing, nurses must still provide care with compassion to the patients because it will serve as the guiding principle of the profession. In spite of what type of healthcare setting they work in, or what type of role they practice, among health care workers, nurses have the most interaction with patients. Some of the few roles they play include patient supporter, educator, supervisor, and leader. Specifically, providing support is often term to be activity provided within the context of nurse-patient relationship. It is the role of the nurse to support the patient and represent the patients best interests at all times, especially when treatment decisions are being made (Smith, 2019).On the other hand, nurse promote professional role development and growth from nursing novice to expert, help mitigate errors, simplify processes, and identify opportunities to improve processes and mitigate risks to the patient, nurse, and hospital (Walsh University, 2019).In contrast to, a nurse supervisor is responsible for managing staff, overseeing patient care and ensuring adherence to established policies and procedures (Thomson, 2020).Finally, nurse leader will incorporate a
