✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Parents, friends, and neighbors respond to the morally wrong acts which encourage people in developing the "talent" of being a true criminal. The ways of how people react when they discover that a young person has been involving him/herself in such criminal acts are important because they will determine whether a young person may continue engaging in this act or not. This essay intends to address the case that needs a personal application of criminology.

My 16-year-old boy is a soccer freak who plays soccer for his school team. Ever since my son's team participated in a big tournament at school, our family had to attend it so that each family member could see how good our son was in order to encourage him as he played the game. All soccer players were going to have their families with them for the game; there was no reason for us not to attend this event, and this would give us plenty of family and neighbors time. On this particular day, we decided to go for a picnic. We carried all the stuff we would need; as we were in a hurry, we would get a perfect spot and rush out of the house not forgetting the dog. We also knew that we had forgotten to pack the dog food and water bowl.

We were lucky enough to find a good spot in which we could have our small family picnic site and for refreshments. We hurried over to the arena so that we could be closer to the field and be in full view. When the game was in motion, I had a little disturbance and had to go see what was happening. The dog was not behaving and what better way to calm a dog than give him some food and a bone. Therefore, I rushed to our bags just to find that there was no dog food but there was always a spare bone in the car. I gave it this bone so that it could calm him but I had to rush home to get some water for my wife. I rushed home quickly and found the door to the house ajar and, as far as I could remember, I was the last to leave the house and there was no way that I could leave the door open like that.

Few cases of burglary have already taken place in the neighborhood, and precautionary mechanisms had to work. Our family was to close the door, and we decided to install an alarm system just to be on the safe side. I was still wondering who could be at the house, I walked to the kitchen because some of the dog food was kept there, and surprisingly, I found Austin, my sons' friend, frantically searching the kitchen
