

Sectionalism and The Civil War

In the year 1861 the civil war began in the United States, the north and south declared war on each other over authority and the law to end slavery. Even though both northerners and southerners believed they fought against tyranny and oppression, Southerners defend their own right to self-government and Northerners focused on the oppression of slaves. It was then when everything would change the future of our nation and the way they saw the world. The union party was led by Abraham Lincoln and the Confederacy was led by Jefferson Davis, it was not a regular war and it went onto costing the lives of 625,000 individuals during the entire war.

The American civil war had by far the greater impact on the American society and polity more than any other even in the entire history of the United States. It was one of the deadliest wars that would go on to take the lives of 2% of the population during that time. Comparing it to today's numbers the lives lost to that war would reach 6 million, which is more than any other war fought by the United States of America. In the battle of Sharpsburg, Maryland in September the casualties of American soldiers exceeded the amount of casualties the United States had in the 19th century combined. One must ask as to why did the confederate and the union fought each other with such ferocity during that time.

It all started at the end of the Mexican-American war which left an unanswered question for the people of the country on whether the new seceded land from Mexico would be pro slavery or against. It is here where a major turning point that would go onto changing the history of the nation forever developed. There were people in the congress from both sides that had different ideas as to how to deal with the territories won from Mexico. On one side there were the northerner congress men arguing that all the new territory should exclude any kind of slavery, while the southern congressmen argue that their slave property into any state or territory in the United States. Then California decides to join the union as a free state and the balance of free and slave states would begin to shift. Years later to try to maintain the peace and from keeping the south from seceding from the nation a set of compromises were passed in congress to calm everyone down and one of the main one was the Missouri compromise, but it was only a means to postpone the final showdown between the north and the south. The Kansas-Nebraska act of 1854 would be the final compromise that would be passed and the one that would fully separate the north and the south because it would allow them to decide for themselves using popular sovereignty whether be free or slave states.

All of those events would be deciding points for the civil war to happen because there was always a feeling of distrust between the pro-slave and anti-slave states after decades of division between both of them. By the time Abraham Lincoln became president, the
