The Future of Military-Media Relations

Thursday 11th July 2013, Central London

Hosted by Lt Commander [Ret'd] Rupert Nichol,
Managing Director, RN Exercise Media Training

About the Masterclass:

This seminar-based discussion will tackle the future development of the complex and sensitive military/media relationship, considering past successes and failures, the present tense situation between Government and the Press, and future opportunities and dangers in the light of new technologies. Drawing on the expert experience of both the speaker and delegates this Masterclass will analyse and evaluate critical training procedures for military personnel and journalists.

Key Topics Include:

- Case studies highlighting past successes and failures in military-media relations
- An understanding of the current complex military-media relationship and why it is so difficult to negotiate
- Where do governments fit within this situation, how can all 3 parties be satisfied
- Where does the relationship break down and what initiatives should be implemented to avoid this
- Effective and necessary training procedures for military personnel

Benefits of Attending:

- Learn from experienced experts and network with industry leaders
- Analyse the current issues in the military media relationship and evaluate how best to overcome them
- Expand your knowledge and understanding of the foremost ideas in media/military relations
- Take away critical skills and practices and apply these new skills to your own operations
