

Body Paragraphs

Heroes are individuals whose life or accomplishments make them stand out compared to others. It may be a single act of greatness or a series of smaller almost miraculous feats that can push them into a category all their own. The article "Wilma Rudolph: Against the Odds" explains how Wilma overcomes unbelievable obstacles to become an Olympic gold medalist. The support of her family and her own determination are the keys to her Olympic success and what makes her a hero.

Wilma Rudolph learned persistence through her family's constant care to help her walk. At the age of four, she was left with a paralyzed left leg after recovering from pneumonia and scarlet fever. Her mother refused to accept that Wilma would never walk again and took her to any doctor that could help no matter how far away. She would do whatever it took and, "for the next two years, Wilma's mother massaged her daughter's leg every day" (11). Wilma's mother continued the treatment even when there were little signs of improvement. Distance and cost would not prevent Wilma from improving if she could help it. With her mother's care, Wilma was able to heroically continue her battle. Her mother could not care for her alone, so "three of the older Rudolph children also learned to give the massage. Soon Wilma was having four treatments a day" (11). Her siblings assisted their mother in caring for her. She was probably receiving more treatments than she would have if they went to the doctor's office daily. Her family's support eventually paid off. By the time she was six years old, Wilma heroically tries to walk. Her family's support helped her to stand and walk. In addition to her persistence, her own determination soon had her running. Wilma did not stop with her first few steps. She was determined to overcome her handicap. It took a lot of time and exercise, but "by the time she was 11, Wilma could walk without the brace or special shoe" (13). She did not start walking independently at first and always pushed herself to walk a little farther than the day before. She seemed to inherit her mother's determination and would not see her limitations as permanent. With her heroism, she improved enough to make the track team at Tennessee State University. While on the track team in college, she started to dream of running in the Olympics. Her training was interrupted by emergency tonsil surgery. However, "three weeks after the operation, she was back out on the track practicing" (15). Her dedication and hard work earned her a spot on the 1960 Olympic team. She had a chance to represent the USA in the sport that she loved. Again she was rewarded for her efforts. She won a gold medal and set a new world record. Her personal determination gave her the strength to face any challenge during her training with success. Wilma Rudolph may be remembered for her Olympic gold and many consider her a hero. Her family's support and tireless efforts to regain use of her left leg ensure that she would be not confined to a chair or bed for the rest of her life. Very few people could have imagine that the girl who needed four massage treatments a day would eventually go on to set a world record in track. In addition, she never saw herself as a limited by her handicap. She continued to seek improvement. Her determination earned her a place on both a college and Olympic track teams.
