Analyzing the Impact of Enhancing Inhaler Techniques on Asthmatic Patients

Introduction

Most asthma victims are children. Alarming,ly, their population is currently growing. Even though there is a continuous innovation when it comes to medicines each year, parents seem to be underestimating its overall effect on children. With this rationale in mind, this paper proposes to perform a study which will analyze the impact of enhancing inhaler techniques on asthmatic patients. The primary findings of the method include the fact that most parents are aware about the capacity and effectiveness of the medicine, using it as the primary treatment for asthma.

Background of the Study

In various places all over the world, a lot of people, particularly children, are currently suffering because of asthma. The rate grows faster than even those who are still below four years old are affected by this disease. It is also alarming that each year, children have become victim to this. Another factor that can possibly trigger crisis is poverty. However, there are also medicines which are available and effective in controlling asthma attack, yet most of them are generally too expensive for common families. The aim of this study is to evaluate the overall effectiveness of the asthma medicine so as to justify the cost involved. Even though there are other medicines available, children who are suffering from asthma are those who are most likely residents of depressed areas. In order to control asthma, there are generally two forms of medicines that are used, referred to as the controllers and the relievers. The controllers perform their job during the swelling, tightening of muscles surrounding the airways. It is used daily, or when a child is not feeling well. Relievers, on the other hand, are referred to as the emergency treatment that is applied in order to potentially open the airways when they are tighter than usual. Relievers may only be applied up to thrice a week, if there is abnormality in breathing using the controller medicine.

With African American Males Waldo E. Johnson Jr., 2010-05-26 African American males have never fared as poorly as they do currently on a number of social indicators. They are less likely to complete high school than their white male and female or African American female peers; they are more likely to exhibit depressive symptoms and they have fewer sanctioned coping strategies. Arguably no other group in American society has been more maligned, regularly faced with tremendous odds that uniquely threaten their existence. When they do receive education, mental health and physical health services, it is often in correctional settings. They are marginalized in public policies on secondary and higher education attainment, marriage and parental expectations, public welfare, health, housing and community development. Yet they remain overlooked in health and social science research and are stereotyped in the popular media. Taking a step back from the traditionally myopic view of African American males as criminals and hustlers, this groundbreaking book provides a more nuanced and realistic portrait of their experiences in the world. Chapter authors, both established and emerging scholars of social problems relevant to African Americans, offer a comprehensive overview of the social and economic data on black males to date and the significant issues that affect them from adolescence to adulthood. Via in-depth qualitative interviews as well as comprehensive surveys and data sets, their physical, mental and spiritual health and emerging family roles are considered within both individual and communal contexts. Chapters cover health issues such as HIV and depression, fatherhood and family roles, suicide, violence, academic achievement and incarceration. With original research and a special eye toward enhancing social work and social welfare intervention practice with this often overlooked subpopulation of American society, this volume will be of great interest to researchers interested in African American issues, students, practitioners and policy makers.
