Background

Excitation-contraction coupling

Muscle cells are specialised to produce lots of contractile proteins. It is possible to stimulate a muscle cell with an electrical stimulus. This will generate an action potential which travels down the sarcolemma. The sarcolemma is the cell membrane, and the myofibrils are contained in the sarcomeres. The sarcomeres are the basic contractile units of the muscle. They are made up of actin and myosin filaments. The sarcomeres are the basic contractile units of the muscle. ### Three stages: Latent

When a muscle is stimulated by an electrical stimulus, it contracts. The latent period is the time between the stimulus and the start of contraction. A muscle contraction is a complicated system and can differ according to the type of muscle and the type of muscle tissue. The following table describes the stages of a muscle contraction according to the sliding filament theory.
