✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

The job of a nurse practitioner (NP) involves a variety of skills based on which one can identify professional goals. The basic requirement for NPs is that they should be able to provide different health services to their patients (Buppert, 2018). NPs are expected to perform a physical and psychosocial assessment of their clients. Also, they should be skilled in urgent and critical care delivery, as well as in promoting the aging population's health (American Association of Nurse Practitioners [AANP], n.d.).

Also, AANP (n.d.) gives priority to the role of NPs in rural health development. The core competencies of NPs include analyzing data, integrating knowledge, and promoting new practice approaches based on research and practice. Employing the best evidence to enhance the quality of services and care is another important competency (Thomas et al., 2012). Apart from that, NPs need to serve as advocates for their patients by suggesting and promoting positive changes to law regulations (Reinisch, 2014). Based on the mentioned aspects of NPs' professional preparation and practice, one should set SMART goals and come up with the plan of achieving them to become a successful NP.

Short-Term Goals

Based on the mentioned requirements and expectations of NPs, I have identified the following short-term goals:

- to receive high-quality education which will allow me to become a knowledgeable and skilled professional;
- to improve my knowledge of working with the aging population;
- to enhance the experience of working in rural health settings.

Each of these objectives is related to my professional career development since their attainment will promote my development as a high-skilled healthcare worker. The strategic plan for achieving short-term goals is the following:
