

The Pressures of College

In many people's imaginations, college is an easy time in life for students to have fun and to not worry. In reality, the majority of students face pressure from many sources. According to William Zinsser's article, "College Pressures", there are four major kinds of pressure that students may face. First, parental pressure, where parents become too pushy about their children's education. Secondly, economic pressure, when a student's family cannot afford tuition and living expenses and students must work while also going to school. Thirdly, peer pressure, where a student's friends may tease for being different or pressure a student to be involved in things they don't want to participate in. Last, but not least, self-induced pressures where students are harsh on themselves to get good grades, to get into a good school, or to try to be perfect on everything.

As an only child, my parents have high expectations of my academic career and they always lecture me about how they came to America just so I could have a better future. They threaten that if I'm not doing well here under any circumstances I may get sent home, which doubles the pressure I already feel. Although I have not dealt much with economic or peer pressures, I am overcoming self-induced and parental pressures by setting my priorities, focusing on every little step that's needed to accomplish my goals by making a daily to-do list, and finally doing exactly what my parents want me to do so they don't have any reason to put more pressure on me.

Though I've just begun college, I am already experiencing self-induced pressure, which can be exhausting both mentally and physically as I strive to achieve perfection and am constantly afraid of falling behind in class. I often worry about my grades and future. I've always had high standards for myself, and I get really frustrated and disappointed when I don't reach my goal. I'm overcoming this by setting my priorities and making a daily to-do list so I can make Notice this author uses the word "many" twice in two sentences. It's better to avoid overusing this word in your writing because it's a generalization.

Susan says...

In this introductory paragraph, the writer begins by referencing an article to explain four types of pressures students might feel.

This sets the stage for the writer to introduce the pressures he feels as a student.

Susan says...

Here's the thesis statement.

The writer states he's experiencing self-induced and parental pressures and is working on overcoming these.

This begins the reflection process, as he starts the discussion of how to overcome the pressures of being a student.

Reply...

Susan says...

Here the writer uses the excellent reflective technique of being vulnerable and truthful about his nature.

He also reflects on the results of the pressures he faces.

Transnational Literacy

Autobiographies as Translingual Writing Suresh Canagarajah, 2019-07-08 The literacy autobiography is a personal narrative reflecting on how one's experiences of spoken and written words have contributed to their ongoing relationship with language and literacy. Transnational Literacy Autobiographies as Translingual Writing is a cutting edge study of this engaging genre of writing in academic and professional contexts. In this state of the art collection, Suresh Canagarajah brings together 11 samples of writing by students that both document their literary journeys and pinpoint the seminal works affecting their development as translingual readers and writers. Integrating the narrative of the author which is written as his own literacy autobiography with a close analysis of these texts, this book presents a case for the literacy autobiography as an archetypal genre that prepares writers for the conventions and processes required in other genres of writing, demonstrates the serious epistemological and rhetorical implications behind the genre of literacy autobiography among migrant scholars and students, effectively translates theoretical publications on language diversity for classroom purposes, providing a transferable teaching approach to translingual writing, analyzes the tropes of transnational writers and their craft in meshing translingual resources in their writing, demonstrates how transnationalism and translingualism are interconnected, guiding readers toward an understanding of code-meshing not as a cosmetic addition to texts but motivated toward resolving inescapable personal and social dilemmas. Written and edited by one of the most highly regarded linguists of his generation, this book is key reading for scholars and students of applied linguistics, TESOL and literacy studies as well as tutors of writing and composition worldwide.
