Abstract. The authors investigate the relationship between the use of a "strong" versus a "weak" form of the word and in English as a function of the position of the word in the sentence. The results show that the use of the strong form of and is more likely when it is in the initial position of the sentence than when it is in the medial position. The results also show that the use of the weak form of and is more likely when it is in the medial position of the sentence than when it is in the initial position. The results are discussed in terms of the role of and in sentence structure and the role of the strong and weak forms of and in sentence structure.
