

Lecture/Reading/Study Guide for Chapter 1

Topics in this Guide: Like all of the chapters, Chapter 1 covers a wide variety of material. The Lecture Reading Guide for this chapter will focus on the very beginning of psychology, the scientific method, and the different types of research methods that are commonly used in psychology.

General Information: The purpose of the Lecture Reading Guides is to guide you through some of the most critical and sometimes challenging material in the text. The topics selected are those I cover in lecture in my traditional courses. As such, the guides help you learn this material and also give you something to focus on for the exams. When preparing for the exams, know that the exam questions will focus on the topics from the Lecture Reading Guides. Note that weekly chapter quizzes serve as reading checks and can cover any of the chapter materials, while exams are focused on the material in the guides.

Instructions for completing the Lecture Reading Guide:

Open up your text to the beginning of the chapter. The questions below will almost always come in order as you read. The guide will not cover the entire chapter, but what I think are the most important parts.

In the guides, you may find additional readings, videos, simulations, websites, images, etc. These are imbedded in the proper locations within the Lecture Reading Guides, so complete such activities in order so that your extra activities (if any) flow properly from topic to topic and connect to what you are reading. I typically use different colors of text to indicate different information and make it clearer. For example, the parts in blue will consist of my notes to you.

Your job is to do the readings and other added items like videos then answer the questions below. You should also take extra notes (right on the guide) as needed to be sure you understand the topics. For this week, you will submit your responses to me for grading. (You won't always do this though.) To do this, you will need to type in your answers and, before submitting, go in and make your responses a text color other than the colors I use to help me find your answers. Also, please use the form below; don't just open up a Word doc and type in the number and answer. It helps me grade it to see it as it is and it helps you study it. You do NOT need to cite in this document unless specifically indicated. I suggest you save it as you go along so you don't lose your answers if there is an issue.

If you wish, you may add spaces for writing, print them, hand-write your responses and notes, and scan and send to me for grading. (Personally, I always prefer to hand-write. I remember it better.)

1. What is psychology defined as? Who is credited for being the father of modern psychology and when did it really begin as a formal discipline? (When you answer something like this, make some notes about this guy... what did he do, etc. In other words, the questions offered may be specific, but you should know the material about these topics more broadly, too, for the exams. Keep this in mind for the coming questions.)

Read about the perspectives in psychology, you will then apply your knowledge below. The various perspectives in psychology are simply primary approaches to problems. It is like going to a movie with your good friend. You (a graphic design major) walk out of the film Avatar saying, "Wow. That was great. I loved the special effects." Your friend, however, tends to approach movies from the dialogue side (an English major). He says, "That movie was lame. Its plot was too simple and the dialogue was not well-developed."

You see? You both were at the same movie looking at the same thing, but you have different ways of approaching the film based on your backgrounds. This makes your focus different. It is like this in psychology, too.
