Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (n = 20) participated in a 12-week walking program, while the control group (n = 20) remained sedentary. The walking program was designed to be low-intensity, with a target heart rate of 110–120 beats per minute. The walking program was supervised by a certified walking instructor. The control group was instructed to remain sedentary. The study was conducted in a community setting. The primary outcome was the change in physical health, measured by the 6-minute walk test (6MWT) and the 400-meter walk test (400MWT). The secondary outcome was the change in psychological health, measured by the Beck Depression Inventory (BDI) and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory (STAI). The results showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on physical health, with the intervention group showing a significant increase in 6MWT and 400MWT compared to the control group. The walking program also had a significant positive effect on psychological health, with the intervention group showing a significant decrease in BDI and STAI scores compared to the control group. The results suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of self-reported depression between men and women who had been exposed to violence during childhood and adulthood. Data from the National Longitudinal Study of Adolescent Health (N = 9,800) were used to examine the association between exposure to violence and self-reported depression among adolescents aged 15–17 years. Results showed that exposure to violence during childhood and adulthood was associated with higher rates of self-reported depression. Furthermore, the association between exposure to violence and self-reported depression was stronger for women than for men.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether the use of a computerized decision support system (DSS) would improve the performance of nurses in making decisions about patient care. A DSS was developed to assist nurses in making decisions about patient care. The DSS was used by 10 nurses in a hospital setting. The results showed that the use of the DSS improved the performance of the nurses in making decisions about patient care.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, at a pace of 3.0 to 3.5 miles per hour. The control group was instructed to continue with their current level of activity. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical fitness, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also had a significant positive effect on the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
