

At the center of the image of President Reconstruction is Frederick Douglass. Douglass was one of the first African Americans invited to the U.S. Senate, and he was the first African American to serve a full term in the Senate.

READING CONNECTION
Why did some think Douglass is in the center of this image?

CHARLOTTE PORTER GRIER 1827–1914

Charlotte Porter was born in Philadelphia. As a teenager, she was the only female student in a private school for girls. She later became the first African American woman to teach white students in a Salem, Massachusetts, public school. During Reconstruction, she moved South to teach freed children. A poet and essayist, Porter also wrote extensively on issues of race. She married Francis Grier, nephew of plantation owner and Angelina Grimké.

Some carpetbaggers were dishonest people looking to take advantage of the South's difficulties, but most were not. Many sincerely wanted to help rebuild the South.

While Southerners accused Reconstruction governments of corruption (unlawful actions—dishonest or illegal actions), some officials did make money illegally. Yet there is no evidence that corruption in the South was greater than in the North.

RESISTANCE TO RECONSTRUCTION

Life during Reconstruction was difficult for African Americans. Most Southern whites did not want African Americans to have more rights. White landowners often refused to rent land to freed people. Store owners refused them credit. Many employers would not hire them. Of the jobs available to African Americans, many were those that whites were unwilling to do.

A more serious danger to the freed people in the South were secret societies such as the Ku Klux Klan. These groups used fear and violence to deny rights to freed men and women. Disguising themselves in white sheets and hoods, Klan members threatened, beat, and killed thousands of African Americans and the whites who supported them. Klan members burned African American homes, schools, and churches. Many Democrats, planters, and other white Southerners supported the Klan. Some saw violence as a way to oppose Republican rule.

Hiram Revels, a senator from Mississippi and the first African American U.S. senator, stated

“The [Klan] terror and hate created by the late civil strife has, in my opinion, been continued in this state, except perhaps in some localities, and will have long since been entirely obliterated, were it not for some unprincipled men who would bring alive the terrors of the past, and incite a fatal revival to arms, in order that they may aggrandize themselves by office and appointments, to control by stealth, the effect of what is a degradation.”

—Hiram Revels in a letter to President U.S. Grant, November 12, 1870

In 1870 and 1871, Congress passed several laws to try to stop the growing Klan violence. These laws were not always effective, since Southerners often refused to testify against those who attacked African Americans and their white supporters.

EDUCATION AND FARMING

READING QUESTION What were some improvements and some setbacks for African Americans?

During the early days of Reconstruction, African Americans built their own schools. Many Northerners came to the South to teach in the 1870s. Reconstruction governments created public schools for both races. Soon about 50 percent of white children and 40 percent of African American children attended school in the South.

African Americans also made gains in higher education. Teachers set up academies in the South. These academies grew into a network of colleges and universities for African Americans. These included Howard University in Washington, D.C., and Morehouse College in Atlanta.

African American and white students usually went to different schools. Few states had laws requiring schools to be integrated (African-ghost-white). Integrated schools have both white and African American students. Often, integration laws were not enforced.

Along with education, freed people wanted land. Having their own farmland would enable them to feed and support their families.
