Midazolam: Use in the Pediatric Intensive Care Population Alissa M. Cuthriell, Pharm.D. Candidate

Sedation is an integral component of patient care in the Pediatric Intensive Care Unit (PICU). There are numerous factors that contribute to anxiety and distress in critically ill children including separation from parents, unfamiliar faces, and invasive procedures. Patients can often be more effectively managed through sedation, resulting in improved patient outcomes. Benzodiazepines are commonly used for sedation in the PICU with midazolam typically being the agent of choice. This brief review will focus on midazolam and its use in the pediatric population.

Mechanism of Action

Midazolam is an imidazolebenzodiazepine that has central nervous system (CNS) depressant effects at all levels of the CNS including the limbic and reticular formation. It acts on the receptor complex of γ -aminobutyric acid (GABA), an inhibitory neurotransmitter. Binding to this receptor complex facilitates the opening of chloride channels so that chloride can enter the cell and hyperpolarization can occur. This makes it difficult for excitatory neurotransmitters to depolarize the cell resulting in clinical effects like CNS depression and amnesia.¹

Indications

Midazolam is currently indicated for sedation, anxiolysis, and amnesia preoperatively or during procedures, for induction of general anesthesia before other anesthetics are administered, for sedation of intubated and mechanically ventilated patients, and as a supplement to nitrous oxide and oxygen. Unlabeled uses include treatment of epileptic seizures and as an alternate for termination of refractory seizures.²

Use in Children

Midazolam has been administered by multiple routes in the pediatric population but is most commonly administered by continuous intravenous (IV) infusion in the intensive care setting. Rosen et al. performed a retrospective study to evaluate midazolam sedation in 55 PICU patients. Most of the patients were admitted with respiratory insufficiency. Sedation was initiated with a bolus of 250 mcg/kg over 3 to 5 minutes followed by a continuous infusion of 0.4-2 mcg/kg/min. The range could be increased to 4 mcg/kg/min after 48 hours if necessary. The mean infusion rate was 0.92 ± 0.54 mcg/kg/min. The median duration of sedation was 74 hours. Inadequate sedation occurred during less than 10% of the total infusion time. No adverse respiratory events were observed with the use of midazolam in this study. Older children reported amnesia for the duration of the midazolam infusion.³

Another study involving the pediatric intensive care population was performed by Booker et al. who evaluated the use of midazolam in 50 pediatric patients, age 6 months to 9 years, following open-heart surgery. Patients received a 200 mcg/kg bolus of midazolam prior to surgery after which an infusion was started at a rate of 2 mcg/kg/min and continued for the duration of the procedure. Upon returning to the PICU, patients were evaluated for recovery and then restarted on the midazolam infusion at an initial rate of 2 mcg/kg/min after a bolus of 200
