

Peer Pressure Summary

Peer Pressure Among Teenagers Children grow up and move into teenage lifestyles, involvement with their peers, and how they look in other peoples eyes start to matter. Their hormones kick in, and they experience rapid changes in their minds, and bodies. They also develop a mind of their own, questioning the adult standards and need for their parental guidance. By trying new values and testing ideas with peers there is less of a chance of being criticized.

Even though peer pressure can have positive effects, the most part is the bad part. Teens have more pressure to be cool, and to be accepted that's what makes them rebel or do what mom or dad had always told them not to do. They may know that it is wrong but it is all about looking cool for that second, or being safe and listen to your parents. Actually, when you are faced with a situation that you know is wrong you don't think about what your parents will think until you have already completed it and there is no turning back.

Then there comes the punishment. That makes the teen rebel more and do more things to be "cool" and doesn't care. When you are a teenager and you have friends that ask you to do something for them and you do not then they get mad. Then think you are a loser and that is ever person's nightmare, to not be liked.

Peer pressure is no piece of cake. It is like choosing the wrong thing for what you think is right at that very moment, and then regretting it afterwards, because your parents find out. But most would not care about what they do wrong or right. Unless there is a chance of parental disappointment, and a lot of the time that is the case.

As children get older they seem to spend a lot more time with their friends, and a whole lot less time with their parents. Therefore what their friends say and do rub off on them, or they start to adopt what their friends do as right or routine. Even though they have been taught most of their lives that it was wrong, or they were taught what...

Introduction to Power Gilad James, PhD, Power refers to the ability of an individual or group to influence the behavior of others Power exists in various forms such as social economic political and physical power It is an essential element in human relationships and it shapes the interactions between people in different social contexts Power can be seen as a tool that is used to achieve certain ends either for the benefit of the individual or group that possesses it or for the benefit of the broader community The distribution of power in society can also have significant effects on social justice and equality Therefore a better understanding of power is crucial for individuals to navigate their social and political environments effectively The study of power has been a central concern in political science sociology and psychology Theories of power attempt to explain how power operates in different contexts and how it shapes social relations The concept of power is often associated with concepts such as authority domination and control Scholars have also explored the dynamics of power in interpersonal relationships organizations and institutions and how power can be used to achieve positive outcomes such as social change and collective action It is essential to recognize that power is not necessarily negative or harmful but it can also be harnessed for the public good The Simple 6TM for Secondary Writers Kay Davidson,2008
