

Peavey Vypyr 15, 30 & 75

£85, £159 & £249

What we want to know

- 1 What's? Why?
Keenly priced digital modelling combos with huge processing power and a USB digital audio output (absent not on the 15 and 30). Why? Because Line 6 and Vox sell tons of the things, and Peavey has the clout to take a big part of that market.
- 2 Is there anything new here?
Peavey is claiming twice the processing power of its nearest rivals, courtesy of 32-bit floating-point SHARC processors, alongside Peavey's TransTube technology for analogue distortion.
- 3 Who's going to buy one?
Anyone who wants a fully functional multi-sound amplifier. Boutique, dream tone machines they're not, but for home use, practice and jamming, you really can't go wrong.

Peavey doesn't do things by halves. The Mississippi-based company's dynamic has always been about providing widely available, quality, affordable musicians' tools. In fact it's hard to turn up a guitar player who hasn't owned, borrowed or been provided with a Peavey amp at some point down the line, with models such as the Bandit and Classic series ubiquitous in gigging and rehearsal circles. So with great gusto, and a reported $10m investment, Peavey introduces Vypyr, a huge, size-11 step into the world of digital modelling guitar amplification.

You might argue that the Big P is a bit late to the game, but having partnered with Damage Control in 2007 – a company that was set up by ex-Line 6 bods – Peavey found it suddenly had access to a mine of modelling know-how. Married with the Meridian giant's considerable experience in the traditional amp market, it was surely the obvious way forward. Let's see where they've ended up...

Vypyr 15, 30 and 75
The new Vypyr range is comprehensive, beginning with the 15-, 30-, 75-watt models that we have on review, plus a 100-watt stereo 2 x 12 format and, interestingly, 60 Tube and 120 Tube models with no power stages. There's a standard feature set in terms of amp and effects models on all but the 15-watter, while the bigger amps get USB 2.0 audio-out (75, 100, Tube 60 Tube, 120 Tube) and the PowerSponge attenuator (75 and 100).

The review models hail from China to help keep prices down. Cabinets are particle board and almost totally open-backed which, without any valves dangling down and a very space-efficient steel chassis to house the electronics, make it all feel very sparse. The upside is that carrying them is a doddle – they're very light.

Stylistically, Peavey has gone for shaped plastic panels on the speaker grille that say 'bat' more than 'make' to us. In any case, they are distinctive and fit well with Hartley Peavey's spiky logo – probably the most recognised brand in all of the gigging and performing world. So far so expected for mass-produced Far Eastern amps, but what's really interesting is on the inside, as Peavey is claiming twice the processing power of its nearest rivals. The 32-bit floating-point SHARC processors take care of the digital side of things, leaving much of the distortion duties to analogue circuitry.

On power up, the LED position markers on every pot dance around like an amp possessed – Peavey is quick to point out this has no practical application other than letting you know its on and, more importantly, attracting people to the Vypyr's charms in music stores. As soon as you plug in, it all stops and you can get down to 'WYSEWYG' business. You can disable the light show if it annoys you, but we like it!

Common to the whole range are 12 digital models of classic and not-so-classic amplifiers through the years, each with a 'clean' and 'dirty' setting. The amps modelled range from the expected Fenders, Marshalls, Vox and Boogie Rectifier, through to Krankenstein, Dionei and Peavey's own 6505, 85X and XXX models (download the manual at www.peavey.com if you want a full list and detailed descriptions).

Accessing them is a doddle: simply turn the amp 'encoder' as Peavey calls it (we'll stick with knobs, eh?) to the model you require and push it to toggle between clean (green LED) and dirty (red LED) modes.

Pushing and holding the amp knob fires up the onboard chromatic tuner, neat. The amp model LEDs tell you what note you're at, the effects knob LEDs go left and right for flat and sharp respectively, then all light up when you're on the money.

12 amp models, each with a clean and dirty setting. This is just the pre plug-in light show
