

Mental Health Peer Support

Though mental health distress is multi-dimensional, some signs are similar between conditions and/or individuals.

Mental health distress can also present more subtly depending on the individual - but subtle cues don't equate to less severity.

Use the "RELA" acronym to help you better recognize, approach, and support someone potentially battling with mental health.

R Recognize and familiarize yourself with the symptoms of mental illness.

E Empathize without competition by actively listening and validating your peer's experiences. Be mindful of your words, tone, and body language.

L Listen by hearing spoken words and noticing physical cues.

A Advocate for your peer's needs and for a greater need to focus on mental health in the community, academia, and professional settings.
