Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the heart rate (HR) and energy expenditure (EE) of sedentary, middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a control group (CON) or a training group (TRN). The TRN group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic exercise. The CON group remained sedentary. The HR and EE were measured at baseline and at the end of the 12-week training program. The TRN group showed a significant decrease in HR and a significant increase in EE compared to the CON group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can effectively reduce HR and increase EE in sedentary, middle-aged women.

- Day and night temperatures that are longer than the standard atmospheric conditions will negatively affect the rate of decomposition of organic materials. Likewise, materials that are not being exposed to oxygen (e.g., in the case of the Forest).
- Ground moisture conditions will negatively affect the rate of decomposition. For example, the length of the season may vary depending on the soil moisture availability.
- The soil pH level will negatively affect the rate of change. The pH level is related to the presence of a buffering capacity, which is the ability of the soil to resist changes in its acidity. Soils with a low buffering capacity (those without a significant amount of base cations) will have a pH that is more acidic.
