Writing Pitman shorthand with Metafont and LaTeX

Abstract
With pen shorthand, the traditional speech-recording method, unwritten speech is at first manually captured and then transliterated into a digital text. We have built programs which reverse the second step of this process, i.e. transform text into shorthand. Here we present as a special case an online system, which converts English text into Pitman 2000 shorthand using Metafont and LaTeX. The impact of our system on pattern recognition of handwritten shorthand and on stenography teaching is discussed.

In order to approximate the speed of speech, alphabet based shorthand systems make use of phonetic writing, abbreviations and simplified writing, thus reducing the redundancy of the orthographic code and the graphic redundancy of longhand characters.

In the following sections we exemplify these principles with the Pitman shorthand language (abbreviated as PSL) and describe how the Pitman 2000 shorthand system can be implemented in Metafont [4].

Elements of PSL

A glyph of one or more words as denoted with PSL, the so-called stenem is composed of an outline   consisting of joined consonant signs, written without lifting the pen from the paper, and diacritics   corresponding to vowel phonemes.

The stenem components are written in this order.
An example: The stenem of the word 'rote' pro-nounced as r + ou t is built of the outline formed by joining the strokes (r) – ∕ and (t) – |, the signs' of the consonant phonemes r and t and the heavy dash sign [ou], the diacritical mark of the vowel ou, following ∕.

The signs of consonant phonemes. These signs, also called strokes, are either line segments or quarter circles:

(p) (b)   (t) (d)   (ch) (jh) (k) (g)
(f) (v)   (th) (dh)   (m) (z) (sh) (zh)

Though invented in 1837, the PSL design is guided by modern phonological classifications and principles [7, 8].

Thus the signs of voiced consonants are more firmly written variants of their unvoiced counterparts. Friction vs. occlusion of a consonant is denoted by rounding the corresponding sign (cf. the rows). A change of the place of articulation causes a change of slant in consonant signs (cf. the columns).

Remaining strokes are:

nasals			liquids

The signs ∼ ∼ ∼ ― ― are horizontals, ⁄ ⁄ are upstrokes; all other consonant signs are downstrokes.

Vowel, diphthong and triphone signs. These diacritical signs are placed alongside a consonant sign, before or after it, depending on whether the vowel is read before or after the consonant, i.e. going from the beginning of a stroke on the left-hand or the right-hand side of upstrokes and horizontals if the vowel is read before or after the consonant. Places are changed for downstrokes.

before   after   'ell'   'lay'   'us'   'so'

Twelve vowel diacritics are realized in PSL. They are differentiated by their glyph (light or heavy, dot or dash) and its position. Any consonant sign has three places for a vowel sign to be located according to the direction in which the consonant stroke is written: at the beginning (1st), in the middle (2nd) or at the end (3rd place).
