

Technology Project Chapter 5

from Triola 12th edition

Binomial: Overbooking Flights

The story: American Airlines Flight 201 from New York's JFK airport to LAX airport in Los Angeles uses a Boeing 767200 with 168 seats available for passengers. Because some people with reservations don't show up, American can overbook by accepting more than 168 reservations. If the flight is not overbooked, the airline will almost certainly lose revenue due to empty seats, but if too many seats are sold and some passengers are denied seats, the airline will lose money from the compensation that must be given to the bumped passengers.

The assumptions: Assume that there is a 0.9005 probability that a passenger with a reservation will show up for the flight (based on data from the IBM research paper "Passenger-Based Predictive Modeling of Airline No-Show Rates," by Lawrence, Hong, and Cherrier). Also assume that the airline accepts 182 reservations for the 168 seats that are available.

The Assignment:

Computation: Find the probability that when 182 reservations are accepted for the flight, more passengers show up than the number of available seats. What is the number of passengers expected to show up for the flight? Is the probability of overbooking small enough so that it does not happen very often, or does it seem high enough that changes must be made? (4pts)

Find: Now use trial and error to find and state the maximum number of reservations that can be accepted to ensure that the probability of having more passengers than seats is 0.05 or less. (3pts)

Ask your own questions: Pretend you are on a committee to ensure maximum profit for American Airlines. What are some things, (beside the probability of no-show), that you would need to know to make the best decisions for the company? Ask at least three questions or state at least three pieces of information you would want. (3pts)

The Tech: Be sure to insert screenshots or png files downloaded from statdisk.org to demonstrate both your computation and your conclusion from trial and error.
