Background

The Kidneys and Filtration

The kidneys are two organs, located in the lower back on either side of the spine. The kidneys are responsible for filtering substances, as well as maintaining a balance, or homeostasis, of substances in the blood. The renal arteries pass blood into the kidneys, and the renal veins bring blood back out of the kidneys. Anything that is removed from the blood by the kidneys ends up as urine. Urine flows from the kidney, down the ureter, and ends up in the bladder. From there urine can be released out of the urethra.

Within the kidneys a complex network of filtering units and tubes called the nephrons can be found. The part of the kidney that is responsible for filtering is the glomerulus. Small capillaries, called glomerular capillaries, lead into the glomerulus and allow the substances to pass through their thin membranes. The filtered substances are then passed through a complex network of tubes that eventually lead to the bladder. As these substances pass through this network and into the bladder, they may be reabsorbed or secreted from the body. The kidneys filter the entire volume of blood in our body 20-25 times every day (Freudenrich 2001).

Urinalysis

The urinalysis is a test that determines what is present in secreted urine. It can reveal many different types of diseases, even those without any visible symptoms. A urinalysis usually includes a visual observation of the urine for color and clarity, a microscopic observation for sediment particles, and a urine dipstick chemical analysis. The chemical analysis is capable of determining pH, specific gravity, glucose, proteins, bilirubin, ketones, presence of blood, urobilinogen nitrites, and leukocytes.

The urinalysis is a useful tool in determining whether a patient's kidneys are functioning regularly as well as helping to diagnose conditions including hydration level, infections, bacteria, liver disease, kidney stones, gallstones, anemia, kidney failure, proteinuria, diabetes, or drug use (just to name a few). Normal versus abnormal levels for a urinalysis, as well as possible conditions that may cause abnormal levels are included in the following data table:
