

Plans for Reconstruction

As the Civil War came to a close, it became obvious that there would be some difficulty reconstructing the South. There were different opinions about how to do it. A plan for Reconstruction was drafted by a group of influential Union officials and was known as the Wade-Davis Bill. It called for a quick return to normalcy for the South. However, many people in the North wanted a more gradual approach. The Reconstruction Act of 1867 was passed, which set the stage for the Reconstruction era.

The Reconstruction Amendments

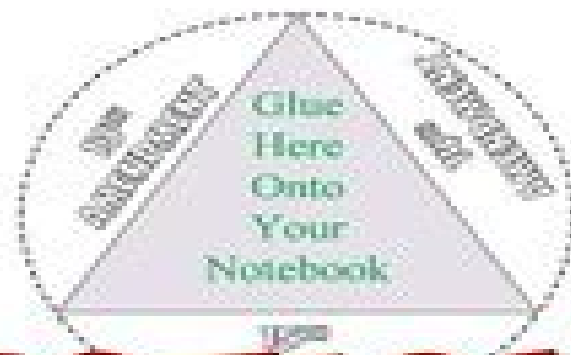

Between 1865 and 1870, three amendments to the Constitution were ratified, which would become known as the Reconstruction Amendments. These were the 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments, which had major implications for the country as well as newly freed slaves. Much of the legislation that came after 1865 is credited to the work of the Radical Republicans, who believed abolition and did not both in completely re-organizing. Despite Congressional support, there were many Southerners who were not in favor of these amendments, and they worked to increase the resistance that had begun as soon as the Civil War

The 13th Amendment passed in Congress on January 31, 1865, a few months before President Lincoln was assassinated. It was not formally ratified until December 6 of that year. The 14th Amendment is considered as the one which formally ended slavery in the United States. It was passed in Congress on August 8, 1868, and was ratified on July 9, 1868.
