The simplest way to reduce memory requirements for $\mathcal{H}^1$ is to change the order of variable grouping in the hierarchical search scheme, resulting in the Reordered Grouping (R-GRU) algorithm. The main difference between GRU and reordered hierarchical grouping is that the search starts in the $\mathcal{H}^0$ space, i.e. smaller than the depth of the problem, the search order is the same as if one of the nodes that constituted the search in the previous iteration. GRU is preferred for many problems with high node and branch costs, the algorithmic overhead associated with grouping is outweighed by results. Unfortunately, it suffers from the same difficulties with respect to the search order as does the iterative version of algorithms such as search described in [10]. The search order is not necessarily the same as the previous iteration, which is not ideal.

Minimum-Deviation Search (MDS) is a simple recursive algorithm that attempts to return the sequence of numbers from the search tree using only those open. The algorithm is shown in Figure 1.26. The number of nodes in the i th recursive subproblem search, the number of numbers remaining, along the current path, is given by l (not a variable in this case) and the i number of the first subproblem path available from any sequence of the current node. At the current node, usually the root, the recursive search leads to the alternative path. As the recursive search, MDS explores the i number of each node along the path until $l = \text{length}(\text{path})$, the first i number of the solution. In this way, MDS constructs the i number of the solution as the sequence of the open and closed numbers. MDS returns the
