

Article 1 of the Constitution: Step #1 The Legislative Branch Scavenger Hunt

Background:

The United States' first constitution, the Articles of Confederation, had created our first Congress, a unicameral (single chamber) body with equal representation. The Founding Fathers gave Congress sole law making ability as they were fearful that a strong president might concentrate power and become a king. Under the Articles, there was no Executive Branch or Judicial Branch. When the Founders created the new Constitution in 1787, they created 3 branches, but their intent was always that the Legislative Branch (Congress), should be the most powerful. Therefore, they made the legislative branch the focus of Article 1 of the Constitution, as a clear signal of their intent.

Directions for Step #1 (make sure you also complete Steps 2 and 3):

Start by using Article 1 from the Constitution (attached) to complete as much of the scavenger hunt as possible. Questions that have an "*" in front of them indicate answers that can't be found in the Constitution. For these questions, and questions that stump you, turn to your smart phones to find the answers (and cite these sources).
