The Handbook of Highway Engineering T.F. Fwa, 2005-09-28 Modern highway engineering reflects an integrated view of a road system's entire lifecycle including any potential environmental impacts and seeks to develop a sustainable infrastructure through careful planning and active management This trend is not limited to developed nations but is recognized across the globe Edited by renowned authority Roads 96, 1996 Road & Transport Research, 2002

CAL/APT Program John T. Harvey, Fenella Long, 1999 This report compared the California Department of Transportation Caltrans and American Association of State Highway and Transportation Officials AASHTO pavement thickness design procedures The design comparisons include pavement structures subjected to a range in traffic as represented by Traffic Indexes of 7 9 11 13 and 15 and a range in subgrade strengths as measured by subgrade R values of 5 20 and 40 This report illustrates that the AASHTO and Caltrans pavement thickness design procedures do not produce the same pavement structures for the same given inputs Material Characterization and Performance Properties of Superpave

Software for the Minnesota Road Research Project David A. Van Deusen, 1996 This report presents the results of an evaluation process of several different flexible pavement backcalculation programs The objective of this study was to compare the performance of the candidate programs in terms of useability and accuracy of backcalculation results This was accomplished by evaluating the selected programs using both field and simulated data The results of the analysis were used as the basis for selecting a program for routine analysis of Mn ROAD pavement deflection data In situ pavement strains were measured during falling weight deflectometer tests The measured strains were then compared to backcalculated strain values from each program In addition to the field tests a series of hypothetical pavement structures with a range of prescribed layer thicknesses and moduli were analyzed to obtain surface deflection data These surface deflections were then used as input for each program involved in the study The output from each program was compared to the expected values
