

Ch. 11 Language & Society Chapter - The Cultural? Language by Bartholomew 2016 Ed 3000

Definition: Language: An arbitrary, conventionalized, structured system of symbols used to communicate (Page 444-445)

→ Communication can only occur successfully if certain shared symbols exist. Symbols are the items used up in the act of communicating the significance of the action.

- Arbitrary language: A cultural communication system is arbitrary because that a particular symbol (underlying) denotes this and nothing else.
- Arbitrary language: The reverse established by the agreement by members of a community that a particular symbol (underlying) denotes this.
- Arbitrary language family: A collection of languages related through common ancestry (linguistic relationship).
- Arbitrary language family: A collection of languages related by a common ancestor that all languages (members) have a set of commonalities (underlying).
- Arbitrary language group: A collection of languages where a group that share commonalities in the specific way they produce sounds (underlying) with no relationship with similarity.
- Other facts about language: Linguistic diversity has been found about those in the world. 2 or three times people speak languages of the world where others maintain large groups of languages (Africa).

What factor is often in English related to others
