

Peer Reviewing Journal Articles

As well as contributing to the quality of the research corpus in your field, conducting peer reviews can benefit your own career as a researcher. The benefits include:

- 1 Learning more about the editorial process. By reviewing a paper and liaising with the editorial office, you will gain first-hand experience of the key considerations that go into the publication decision, as well as commonly recommended revisions.
- 2 Keeping up to date with novel research in your field. Reviewing also gives you a glimpse of emerging research in your discipline, sometimes months before it is to be published.
- 3 Having an opportunity to demonstrate your expertise in a field. It is becoming more common for researchers to use their review experience as evidence of their expertise when applying for funding or job applications, whether this is done informally or through validated reviewer recognition sites such as Publons.
- 4 Some journals are also experimenting with providing direct incentives to reviewers, such as payments, discounts on article processing charges and access to content.
