Abstract: A growing interest in and concern about the adequacy and fairness of modern peer-review practices in publication and funding are apparent across a wide range of scientific disciplines. Although questions about reliability, accountability, reviewer bias, and competence have been raised, there has been very little direct research on these variables.

The present investigation was an attempt to study the peer-review process directly, in the natural setting of actual journal referee evaluations of submitted manuscripts. As test materials we selected 12 already published research articles by investigators from prestigious and highly productive American psychology departments, one article from each of 12 highly regarded and widely read American psychology journals with high rejection rates (80%) and nonblind refereeing practices.

With fictitious names and institutions substituted for the original ones (e.g., Tri-Valley Center for Human Potential), the altered manuscripts were formally resubmitted to the journals that had originally refereed and published them 18 to 32 months earlier. Of the sample of 38 editors and reviewers, only three (8%) detected the resubmissions. This result allowed nine of the 12 articles to continue through the review process to receive an actual evaluation: eight of the nine were rejected. Sixteen of the 18 referees (89%) recommended against publication and the editors concurred. The grounds for rejection were in many cases described as "serious methodological flaws." A number of possible interpretations of these data are reviewed and evaluated.

Journal articles serve an important function in providing scientists with information about new ideas and discoveries in their areas of interest. Published papers also serve as vehicles for personal advancement, job security, and continued research opportunities. In academic settings the "publication count" is often a factor in determining salary or merit-pay increments, grant funding, promotion, and tenure (Cottfredson 1978; Scott 1974). Getting research published can also have consequences for entire academic departments. Summaries periodically appear in the literature that rank both the overall and the per capita productivity of departments of psychology (e.g., Cox & Catt 1977; Endler, Rushton & Roediger 1978; Roose & Anderson 1970). Such rankings can establish a psychology department's reputation, which can potentially affect the number and quality of graduate students applying for advanced degrees, the awarding of competitive funds, and the pride and self-esteem of individual faculty members.

Although many are undoubtedly content with the peer-review practices employed by modern research journals, a growing number of psychologists have raised important questions about the adequacy of the review system. Moreover, judging from the variety of disciplines represented by those calling for improvements in the review practices of journals, it would appear that criticism of the review process is not limited to one or two areas, but rather extends across many fields of science. (In the social sciences, see Brackbill & Korton 1970; Crane 1967; Gove 1979; McCartney 1973; Revusky 1977; Tobach 1980; Walster & Cleary 1970; in the physical and medical sciences, Cicchetti & Conn 1976; M. D. Gordon 1980; Hamad 1979; Ingelfinger 1974; Jones 1974; McCutchen 1976; Ruderfer 1980; Stumpf 1980; Zuckerman & Merton 1973.)

A major portion of the criticism of the journal review system has concerned the reliability of peer review. Empirical evidence concerning reviewer reliability has, until recently, been rather meager, considering the importance of this topic. Most of the reviewer-reliability literature has been contributed by social scientists, more specifically, by psychologists and sociologists. With a few exceptions (Crandall 1978a; Scarr & Weber 1978), the results of these investigations have not been encouraging. Interrater agreement between the reviewers of a manuscript, measured by a variety of rating scales and statistical analyses, is typically reported as low to moderate, with intraclass correlation coefficients of 0.55 at best (Bowen, Perloff & Jacoby 1972; Cicchetti 1980; Cicchetti
