

Learning Objectives Define what birth, death, and life expectancy are. Give examples of how these factors are used to study growth rates of populations. Give examples of how these factors are used to study growth rates.

Types of Population Growth		Factors	Graphs
Exponential Growth		An organism is born at a constant rate, and the population grows exponentially without limits.
Logistic Growth	Phase 1	An organism is born at a constant rate, and the population grows exponentially without limits.
	Phase 2	Resource Limitation
	Phase 3	The carrying capacity of the environment is reached.

Lesson Summary

Describing Populations

Life expectancy is the average number of years a person is expected to live. It is calculated by dividing the number of years lived by the number of people who have died.

Change after 10 years is the difference between the number of people who were born and the number who died. It is calculated by subtracting the number of deaths from the number of births. The result is the change in the population over the 10-year period.

Carrying capacity is the maximum number of individuals that an environment can support. It is determined by the availability of resources such as food, water, and space.
