An Analysis of Alan D. Baddeley and Graham Hitch's Working Memory Birgit Koopmann-Holm, Alexander O'Connor, 2017-07-05 The work of memory researchers Alan Baddeley and Graham Hitch is a prime example of the ways in which good critical thinkers approach questions and the problems they raise In the 1960s researchers into human memory began to understand memory as comprising not one but two systems The first was a short term system handling information for mere seconds The second was a long term system capable of managing information indefinitely They also discovered however that short term memory was not simply a filing cabinet as many had thought but was actively working on cognitive or mental tasks This is how the phrase working memory developed The hypothesis remained unproven however presenting Baddeley and Hitch with the problem of working out how to produce definitive evidence that short term memory was a working system that actively manipulated and processed information They responded by designing a series of ten experiments aimed at showing just this presenting the results in their 1974 article Working memory The research was a masterpiece of problem solving that proved revelatory The authors not only generated new solutions and made sound decisions between alternative possibilities they also showed that short term memory is indeed an active system responsible for information processing and managing while also influencing attention reasoning reading comprehension and learning While their work has since been refined by others Baddeley and Hitch's problem solving approach helped to create the dominant understanding of working memory that underpins psychological research throughout the world today

Towards a Theory of Thinking Britt Glatzeder, Vinod Goel, Albrecht Müller, 2010-03-20 What is Thinking Trying to Define an Equally Fascinating and Elusive Phenomenon Human thinking is probably the most complex phenomenon that evolution has come up with until now There exists a broad spectrum of definitions from subsuming almost all processes of cognition to limiting it to language based sometimes even only to formalizable reasoning processes We work with a medium sized definition according to which thinking encompasses all operations by which cognitive agents link mental content in order to gain new insights or perspectives Mental content is thus a prerequisite for and the substrate on which thinking operations are executed The largely unconscious acts of perceptual object stabilization categorization emotional evaluation and retrieving all the above from memory inscriptions are the processes by which mental content is generated and are therefore seen as prerequisites for thinking operations In terms of a differentia specifica the notion of thinking is seen as narrower than the notion of cognition and as wider than the notion of reasoning Thinking is thus seen as a subset of cognition processes and reasoning processes are seen as a subset of thinking Besides reasoning the notion of thinking includes also nonexplicit intuitive and associative processes of linking mental content According to this definition thinking is not dependant on language i.e. also many animals and certainly all mammals show early forms of thinking
