

How Genes Work

Each chromosome contains thousands of genes. A gene is a short section of DNA that codes for a specific protein. Genes contain the instructions for making a protein. Proteins are the molecules that do most of the work in a cell. They are made up of amino acids. The sequence of amino acids in a protein determines its shape and function.

DNA Structure

Deoxyribonucleic acid, or DNA, is a double-stranded molecule. The two strands are made of deoxyribose sugar and phosphate groups. The nitrogenous bases are attached to the deoxyribose sugar. The bases are adenine (A), thymine (T), guanine (G), and cytosine (C). A and T pair together, and G and C pair together. This pairing is called base pairing.

Copying DNA

The process of copying DNA is called DNA replication. It happens when a cell is about to divide. The DNA double helix unwinds, and each strand acts as a template for a new strand. This way, each new cell gets a complete copy of the DNA.

Making a Protein

The process of making a protein is called protein synthesis. It happens in the cytoplasm of a cell. First, a copy of the DNA is made, called a messenger RNA (mRNA). The mRNA then moves to a ribosome, where it is used to make a protein. The ribosome reads the mRNA in groups of three letters, called codons. Each codon codes for a specific amino acid. The amino acids are joined together to form a long chain, which then folds into a specific shape to become a protein.

Transcription

DNA is copied to make mRNA. This process is called transcription. It happens in the nucleus of a cell. The DNA double helix unwinds, and one strand is used as a template to make a single-stranded mRNA molecule.

Translation

mRNA is used to make a protein. This process is called translation. It happens in the cytoplasm of a cell. The mRNA is read by a ribosome, which joins amino acids together to form a protein.
